ABOUT OUR PRESENTATION

What is the built environment? The built environment is the man-made or modified structures and spaces that make up a community, including the places where people live, work, and play.

Occupational therapy practitioners (OTPs) play a key role in the built environment by helping to create accessible and supportive environments for people of all abilities. Their unique perspective to the design of spaces, including home modifications and universal design, considers the human life span, development, and varying levels of ability.

Overall, this presentation will:

- Highlight how the built environment drives medical costs across ages and lines of business
- Review the role the home is playing in modern healthcare delivery
- Discuss the changes and opportunities for occupational therapy practitioners in Managed Medicaid in California
- Review the clinical impact of home modifications in Medicaid and Medicare
- Identify the various types of home modifications, including exterior modifications
